Summary

ID 370
 Target SPT-1
 Date 2/21/91

Target appeared to be divided into four sections:

Light 2 appeared to be a flat surface that curved up and to the right. Its color appeared to be grayish with a slight bumpy texture. I had the impression that it was slick, wet and cold.

Light 1 appeared to be lighter in color than light 2 but still gray in color. It appeared to be flat with a lighter shade of gray to the right.

Dark 1 appeared to be dark <sup>(almost black)</sup> in color, solid but not solid like an object of consistent density.

Dark 2 appeared to have more of a curved shape than dark 1 — like it was smaller and curved up and to the right. It felt more massive or denser than dark 1. I felt that it was mottled — different shades of gray and black.

My impression of the target was a road or path or stream with dense trees to the left and a rocky surface to the right. It seems to have a chill associated with it and gave the impression of a scene

Added impressions

I felt that if I followed the path to point A it would chop down and to the right to a valley surrounded by mountains. The predominant color I sensed was orange, I had a feeling of expansiveness and grandeur as I looked at the scene.
